This passage is taken from a novel for young adults. In this part of the book, the main character is on the run, trying to escape from the demon-creatures that have killed his father and injured him. He now finds himself alone in the forest.

Read the passage carefully and answer the questions that follow. Write your answers in the spaces provided.

Pulling his axe from his belt, he went over to a clump of birch and put his hand on the smallest. He gathered his strength and started to chop.

The effort made his head swim. The cut on his forearm throbbed savagely but he forced himself to keep chopping.

- 5 He was in an endless dark tunnel of chopping and stripping branches and more chopping. But when his arms had turned to water and he could chop no more, he saw with alarm that he'd only managed to cut down two spindly birch saplings and a puny spruce.

They'd have to do.

- 10 He lashed the saplings together with a split root to make a low, rickety lean-to, then he covered it on three sides with spruce boughs, and dragged in a few to lie on.

- It was pretty hopeless, but it would have to do: he didn't have the strength to rain-proof it with leafmould. If it rained, he'd have to trust his sleeping sack to 15 keep him dry and pray that the river spirits didn't send another flood, because he'd built too close to the water.

Munching a handful of nuts from his pocket, he scanned the clearing for firewood. But he'd only just swallowed the last nut when his belly heaved and he spewed them all up again.

20 Why did I do that? thought Torak. Did I eat something bad? But it didn't feel like bad food.

It felt like something else.

He realised then that he was sweating and shivering, and although there was nothing left in his stomach to throw up, he still felt sick.

25 A horrible suspicion gripped him. He unwound the bandage on his forearm – and fear settled on him like an icy fog. The wound was a swollen, angry red. It smelled bad, and he could feel the terrible heat coming off it. When he touched it, pain rose like sudden flames.

A sob rose in his chest. He was exhausted, hungry and frightened. And now he 30 had a new enemy.

Fever.
